Letter of Instruction Guidelines

How would you like the following items to be handled?

One of the most precious gifts we can leave behind is a well-conceived plan to assist our loved ones during their time of grief. Taking the time now to draft clear instructions can save them countless hours later on when making essential and important decisions, and crafting plans that may be even more difficult to address under the circumstances. The following are some considerations:

01 People to notify 02 Immediate cash needs 03 Location of important documents Funeral arrangements 04 05 Insurance proceeds

Important Note: All Letters of Instruction should be reviewed by your estate attorney and should not conflict with the terms of your will or other legal documents.

Next, describe each of your major financial assets, their purpose, how to manage them and when and under what circumstances they should be dispersed or restructured.

Today, some families are using DVD, video or CD recordings to memorialize their thoughts, feelings and wishes. You may want to consider using these methods to create your own living memory. Please contact your attorney or legal representative to discuss further.

Finally, take a moment to write to all of your loved ones.
