Cardinal Directions - Our Thoughts November 2025

In reference to the three questions discussed in the Q3 Market Summary video above, five topics require attention.

significant policy shift after a few years of tightening. With additional cuts expected between now and January 2026, this shift tells us that the inflation battle is moving in the right direction and policymakers are committed to ensuring the economy stays on course. Historically, when the Fed is easing and the economy avoids recession, unemployment claims. Overall, the labor market looks softer but remains healthy enough to support spending.² Corporate Earnings. Earnings growth continues to surprise to the upside, particularly in technology but also in energy, materials, financials, and healthcare companies. The advancement and implementation of Artificial Intelligence is still unfolding and is starting to show real productivity gains. This helps justify current valuations and could Geopolitical Risk. Tensions remain elevated in several locations, e.g., Ukraine, the Middle East, and China. These risks are always present and can create bouts of volatility, but historically markets tend to recover quickly unless events become systemic.⁵

When we step back, the fundamentals remain supportive. We see earnings are growing, employment is steady enough to support spending, and technology is driving

Team West Point Commentary: In lieu of individual commentaries this month, we wanted to share as a team about our experience a few weeks ago participating in the Thayer Leadership program at West Point. It was an incredible experience, where each of us stepped away better equipped to tackle challenges and empowered to lead in our own unique ways. Great teams are no accident and are a result continued work and improvement. But, most important, they are formed through putting individual desires aside to achieve a collective goal. We want to thank Morgan Stanley leadership for including us in this event and look forward to implementing all the knowledge shared. Also, the final picture was where we caught CRG Senior Financial Advisors, Tom Batson and Rob Hoffman, deep in thought following the program, contemplating all they had learned and looking sharp. We had to share. All the best, The Compass Rose Group
